

A Waist of Cake

cardboard, silicone caulk, fabric, embroidery thread, organza ribbon, metal hooks, hot glue, paint

A Waist of Cake is a hoop skirt decorated to look like a four tiered Victorian era style cake. This piece explores the idea of a sculpture meant to be torn down as soon as it is created by recreating its structure in a form that cannot be consumed. The consumption of such a lavish cake shows the cyclic nature of energy: the energy required to produce a beautiful centerpiece transforms back into energy used by the human body. First Law of Thermodynamics: Energy cannot be created nor destroyed.

Further exploration in A Waist of Cake includes modern day societal standards of the female waist. Small waists are coveted and thus, birthday girls may not eat cake on their birthdays to avoid additional sugar and fat. By transforming the human body into cake, and into art, this piece attempts to convey that the body is beautiful, and that the cake should be eaten.

Process Images

Not pictured

- Very initial fabrication of fabric strips and belt
- Cardboard pieces not put together yet
- Just frosting details, no red flowers or red interior
- When I tried to add red details and didn't like it so I covered it up with more silicone :(

Final Documentation

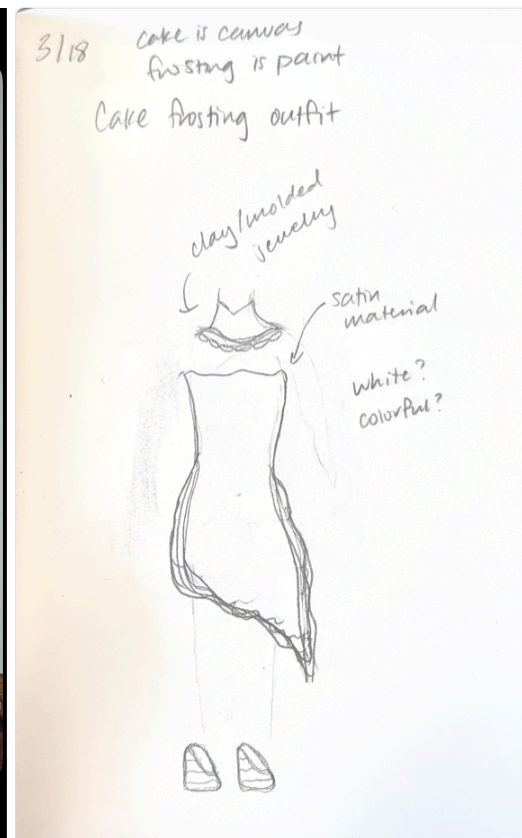

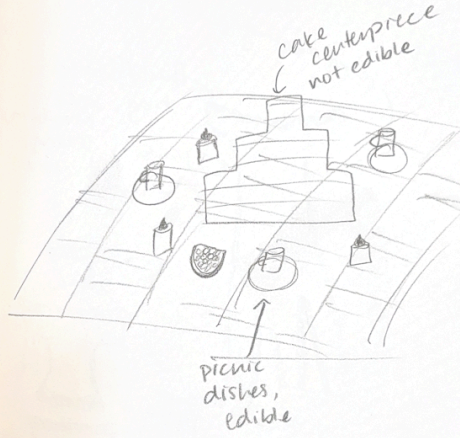

Conceptual Development

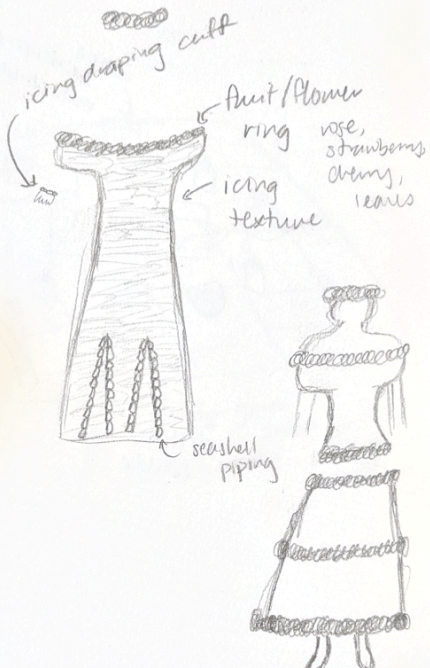

picnic outfit

end goal, picnic setting → performance ish?

mood fabrics sewing pattern

Sheet Metal Cake

References

<https://www.kathleenlangecakes.com/post/history-of-cake-decorating>

<https://historicalfoodways.substack.com/p/the-vintage-cake-trend-and-nostalgic>